CORPORATE COMMUNICATIONS

Lending a helping hand part of culture

January 23, 2019

McLean, Virginia— As Lewis-Price & Associates, Inc. continues to grow, we recognize that we have the responsibility to be a positive corporate citizen by giving back and establishing a positive impact upon the communities in which we live and work.

Corporate social responsibility has been incorporated even more, as a key principle of the company in 2018 and will continue as we move forward.

Over the past year we have donated more than $50,000 supporting initiatives such as Project Give Back, The Boys & Girls Club of Greater Washington, The Hopkins House Association, and other organizations committed to helping children and families.

Project Give Back provides Thanksgiving baskets to organizations that assist over 2,000 families in the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. We donated funds, provided a truck driver and a lead floor projection coordinator for the event in 2018.

After Hurricane Florence in North Carolina, Lewis-Price reached out to a family and was able to assist with providing housing and furniture after the family lost everything in the hurricane.

The company also awarded a $9,000 scholarship to a deserving Virginia Commonwealth University student which covered the cost of a full semester covering room and board.

“We believe that business success and the needs of the community are connected and that businesses should do everything possible to have a positive impact,” said Ken Coleman President and CEO.
