McLean, VA | Lewis-Price & Associates, Inc. | October 30, 2020

Founder and CEO, Ken Coleman of Lewis-Price & Associates, Inc., was a panelist Thursday on Historically Black Colleges and Universities' Career Catch panel hosted virtually by Washington Football Team's Black Engagement Network.

Nearly 260 students from 40 universities around the country were provided an opportunity to interact with successful black professionals and get exposed to information that can help advance their careers.

"Helping students prepare for entering the workforce and beginning their careers is one of the best ways all of us can give back to our communities. It was a true honor to be a part of the event," said Coleman. "We look forward to continuing to support the great work that the Washington Football Team's Black Engagement Network does in providing first-hand career advice, industry updates and other support to black professionals."

Coleman explained the values of taking risks on yourself and not only listen to your gut but to obey your gut. He also discussed the idea of truly understanding your core values, which allows you to learn the foundation of who you are.

Coleman, a leader in the staffing and professional development industry for nearly two decades and chief executive of one of the fastest growing companies in the Greater Washington area, provided career advice and personal insights on preparing for and landing the job you want, and then leveraging that opportunity into a journey to an amazing career. He participated on this panel with other top executives in the local D.C. area, answering questions and discussing topics related to past experiences and personal career stories. The panel session was followed by a Q&A session with event attendees.
