Lewis-Price Team Launches Monthly Virtual Program Management Brown Bag Lunch Series with DMA

MCLEAN, Va., March 10, 2021 – Lewis-Price & Associates, Inc., a fast-growing mission solutions company supporting federal agencies through premiere training, program management, and technology services, is leading a virtual Brown Bag Lunch Series on Program Management for the Defense Media Activity. The goal of these events is to educate and expand DMA’s understanding of the program management services Lewis-Price provides and help DMA develop its program management office.

“We are excited to be launching this series together with DMA and look forward to sharing insights with their team about training, professional development and program management,” said Ken Coleman, founder and CEO of Lewis-Price. “We believe in creating a partnership with our customers and their entire organization, and we continually strive to seek ways to go above and beyond to support that relationship and add value whenever we can. Often communication and open forums for idea sharing is a fundamental element of this type of success.”

The Brown Bag Lunch series, being held virtually due to the COVID-19 pandemic, started Feb. 8 with the session leaders introducing workplace project management. The event series is led by the Lewis-Price program management support team and is open exclusively to DMA colleagues from across the U.S. Each session is held virtually monthly and explores a new topic or aspect within the scope of program management with seven more sessions scheduled.

“This series is a great opportunity to provide our DMA customers with our team’s unique expertise surrounding program management,” said contractor Bryan St. George with the program management office at DMA. “By leading these specialized training sessions, Lewis-Price is providing DMA with the proper tools and resources to support it through the process of growing and expanding its program management office. We’re continuing to develop tailored solutions to support our customers’ needs.”

Lewis-Price project management experts will be available to discuss and answer any questions during the monthly sessions. The next session is scheduled April 5 and will cover the topic of time management.
